Social Connection Improves Health, Well-Being & Longevity

Post published by Emma M. Seppälä Ph.D. on Aug 26, 2012 in Feeling It

We all know the basics of health 101: eat your veggies, go to the gym and get proper rest. But how many of us know that social connection is as important? Social connection improves physical health and psychological well-being. One telling study a showed that lack of social connection is a greater detriment to health than obesity, smoking and high blood pressure. On the the flip side, strong social connection leads to a 50% increased and a social connection leads to a 50% increased and a social connection leads to a social connection chance of longevity. Social connection strengthens our immune system of (research by Steve Cole shows that genes impacted by social connection also code for immune function and inflammation), helps us recover from disease faster, and may even lengthen our life . People who feel more connected to others have lower rates of anxiety and depression a. Moreover, studies as show they also have higher self-esteem, are more empathic to others, more trusting and cooperative and, as a consequence, others are more open to trusting and cooperating with them. Social connectedness therefore generates a positive feedback loop of social, emotional and physical well-being. Unfotunately, the opposite is also true for those who lack social connectedness. Low social connection has been generally associated with declines in physical and psychological health as well as a higher propensity to antisocial behavior that leads to further isolation.

Corruption is anti-social behaviour

So, then how has corruption flourished?

Lurking in the shadows

It is difficult for the community to confront what people cannot really 'see'

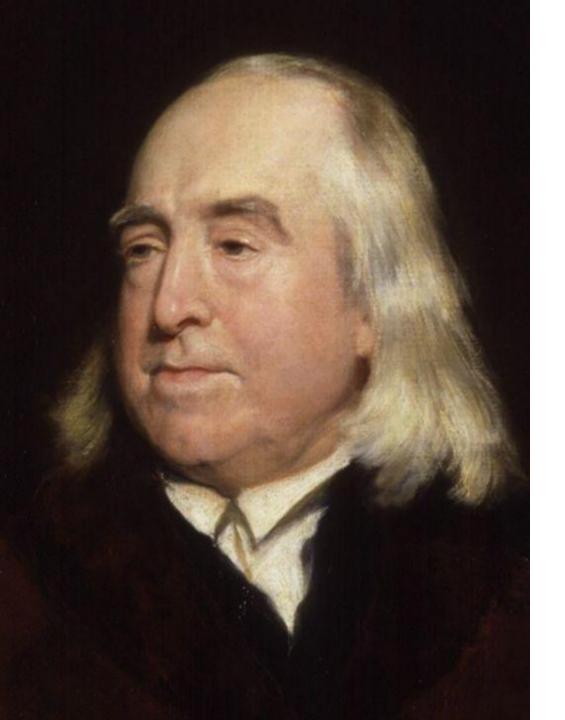

Lit-up by the mainstream media

March 2014

"We investigate how digital media that provides for the possibility of two-way communication impacts corruption using data for over 150 countries.

We find that the internet penetration has a significant and negative impact on corruption which is consistent with the findings of the previous studies (Andersen et al., 2011).

We also find a sizable and statistically significant impact of social media (proxied by Facebook penetration) on corruption."

Flourishing in media 'blind spots'

- Corruption has always been exposed by publicity in the past, but the illumination has been limited by the finite reach of the mainstream media
- There are only so many cameras and microphones, and only so many reporters with eyes and ears
- That is now changing fast driven by social technology
- We are transitioning away from an old era of dry text and recorded visuals published/broadcast from a small number of

Making media capture ubiquitous

- Social media is like a new 'social operating system' – the nervous system of the whole community
- Social allows us to see and to experience corruption in a way that' s never before been possible
- Across geography, indoors and outdoors, audio, video, instant messaging, etc.
- Social media can be summoned to record millions of 'micro-moments' of

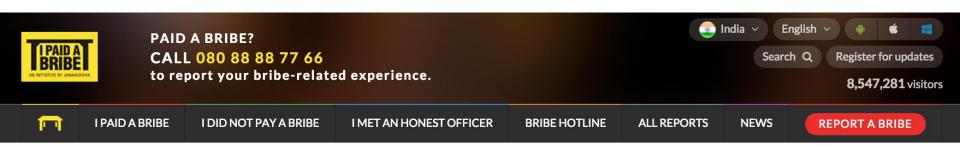

Time is spent in 'micromoments'

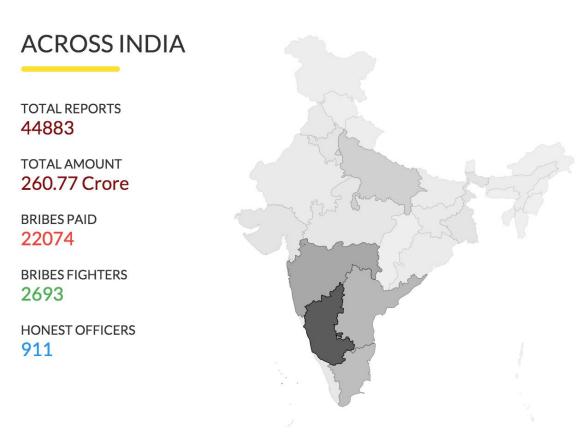

Micro-moments occur when people reflexively turn to a device -increasingly a smartphone-to act on a need to learn something, do something, discover something, watch something, or buy something. They are intent-rich moments when decisions are made and preferences shaped. In these moments, consumers' expectations are higher than ever. The powerful computers we carry in our pockets have trained us to expect brands to immediately deliver exactly what we are looking for when we are looking. We want things right, and we want things right away.

How does that manifest itself?

- Through the video of the guy accepting the payoff
- The photo of the car or house the public official cannot possibly afford
- The texted testimony of thousands who have heard about wrongdoing with their own ears or seen it with their own eyes

'Whistleblowers' more powerful

The media no longer has the capability to be sole watchdog and whistleblower, so now the people are basically doing that themselves...

So what?

- Now the 'line-of-sight' on the sordid frontiers of corruption is incredible
- People aren' t just hoping for more transparency –and they aren' t just demanding it
- Now they also have mobile devices to ensure it

Social media encouraging corruption whistleblowing

Control C

China's use of social media to encourage public tip-offs about corrupt or unprofessional official practice is gaining steam.

In Qinhangdao City of north China's Hebei Province, more than 20,000 citizens have used an app launched in August which enables them to report officials' "undesirable work styles" such as bureaucracy and extravagance to the city's discipline watchdog.

Discipline staff have received more than 300 complaints via the app, said an official with the Qinhuangdao Municipal Discipline Inspection Commission of the Communist Party of China (CPC).

Authorities have handled over 200 of the cases, punishing 30 officials for offences ranging from driving government cars for personal affairs to organizing extravagant banquets for family weddings or funerals.

"A small mobile phone can help solve a big problem. Every mobile phone is a tool for inquiry and everyone is a supervisor," said Hao Zhanmin, secretary of the commission.

Since late 2012, the new Chinese leadership has launched campaigns against corruption and misconduct among officials. More than 100,000 officials have been punished.

The thing is...

- The media has always been feared by those engaging in corrupt practices — so such people sometimes actually try to control the media
- Indeed, in many places, the media itself is suspected of being corrupt!
- Yet, ironically, people are arguably controlling the media as much as they are being controlled by it
- Even with controls and firewalls, it is the mass public who now decide which stories are trending and who is going to be a star — not

Riepl's Law

Riepl's law is a hypothesis formulated by Wolfgang Riepl in 1913. It is frequently cited in discussions about newly emerging forms of media in the scientific community in German-speaking countries.^[citation needed]

Riepl, the chief editor of Nuremberg's biggest newspaper at the time, stated in his dissertation about ancient modes of news communications (original title: "Das Nachrichtenwesen des Altertums mit besonderer Rücksicht auf die Römer") that new, further developed types of media never replace the existing modes of media and their usage patterns. Instead, a convergence takes place in their field, leading to a different way and field of use for these older forms.

This hypothesis is still considered to be relevant, explaining the fact that new media never make the "old" media disappear.

Cross-pollination

- Traditional media business is declining, but social media feeds mainstream media coverage with story fodder and public barometer information
- As a direct result, reporters have never had more stuff inside their 'bag of tricks'
- The traditional mainstream media reports citizen media angles and amplifies the story-sharing online

Good things social media can do

- crowd-source ideas
- tip-off the authorities
- share experiences
- sign-up volunteers
- channel opinion
- motivate activists
- induce direct action

Educate the people and inspire positive change!

Bad things social media can do

- deny the honest truth
- spread rumours
- traffic vicious gossip
- deflect attention
- smear opponents
- 'rabble rouse'

Play to the gallery and whip up an angry mob!

The seven deadly social media sins

- 1. Lust
- 2. Greed
- 3. Gluttony
- 4. Sloth it ′
- 5. Wrath
- 6. Envy I' m worth it'
- 7. Pride

'I am angry about this' 'I want what s/he' s got;

'I am better; I deserve this'

Communication caters to egos

"You are important to us"

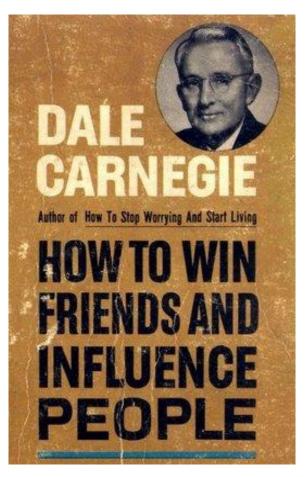

"We need your opinions to help inform our actions"

- there are many emotions in play which we have to deal with today as never before
- clicking 'like' generates 'likes'
- know-it-all-ism online; the RT = true expertise?
- 'sharing' can be selfish ('what makes you look good')

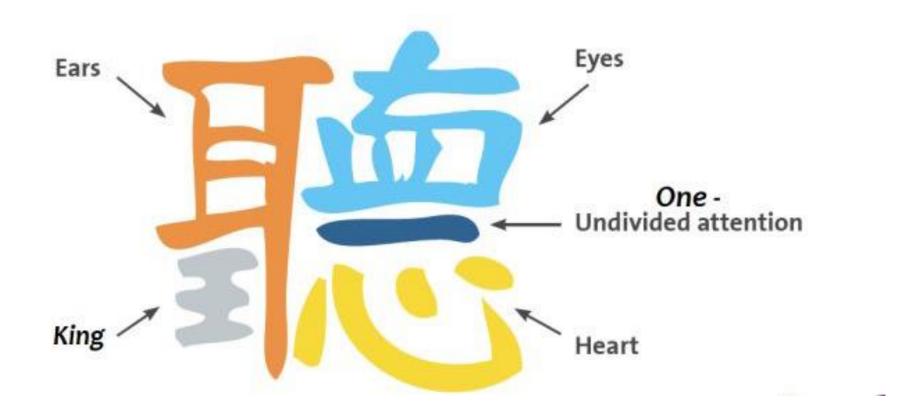

'Listening' can be sincere or artifice

"Talk to someone about themselves and they' Il listen

- keep in mind that 'listen' and 'silent' are made from the same letters
- start with talking, and you tune people out and often annoy them
- social media creates new
 "Make the other person feel

Key questions for decisionmakers

- How to harvest and channel social media engagement on corruption into tangible outcomes?
- How to connect social inputs with systemic actions?
- What to make visible online and private offline?
- Resourcing and reporting responsibility
- Evidencing the progress being made...

Rurden of proof rather than concation of

Transparency isn't optional; it's becoming mandatory whether or not we want it to be

Social leadership communication

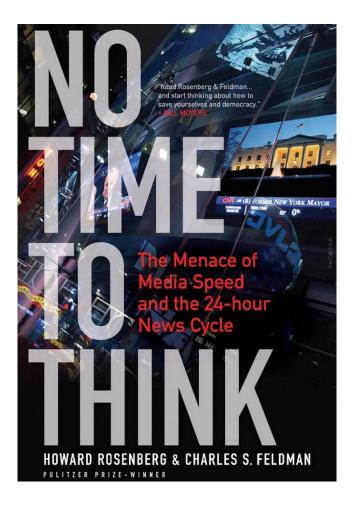

- Chiefs need to be savvy about social and show the way, managing emotions & sharing information in a resonant way
- Their ignorance needs to be addressed so they can make wise decisions about how to use social media for communication – not just marketing to sell things
- Leaders decide who is in charge and how much money will be invested in social, so they need to be much more savvy

Clinton Praises Social Media as Way to Fight Corruption

BY ALEX MOE

NEW YORK – Former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton on Thursday praised social media as a way to hold government accountable, fight corruption and promote economic opportunity around the globe.

"Using social media to motivate them [young people] to connect them up, to stand up for you know those bones - good governance, good accountability, strong anticorruption measures - will open up possibilities for jobs to be created, for entrepreneurs to flourish," Clinton said at an event hosted by the U.S. Agency for International Development.

Social media and anti-corruption efforts may sound like strange bedfellows, but as communication technology continues to evolve and as mobile devices are increasingly dominant platforms for accessing information, social media is ever more connected to attempts to thwart corruption.

"Voice of Corruption Hunters in Social Media", a panel discussion at the International Corruption Hunters Alliance (ICHA) Conference hosted by The World Bank Group, provided a nice summary of the importance of social media for communicating on anti-corruption. Jeremy Hillman, Christine Montgomery, Jessica Tillipman, Matthew Stephenson, and Julie Dimauro filled out the panel and provided an interesting break-down of the role of social media and some stories to back up their claims.

"...while social media is helpful, it is should be viewed as just one ingredient in an anti-corruption effort. Communication via social media is most effective when it is integrated within a broader strategy of reporting and reform. This requires coalition building and wider support from those in government and the private sector. Social media can support how these actors coalesce around an issue but cannot singlehandedly champion anti-corruption legislation or compliance procedures."

— Roxanne Bauer, World Bank consultant
